Sharing God's heart with struggling women

Dear Friends and Partners,

As you know, Cyrus and I returned from a trip to the Central African Republic (CAR) this past January. But in March, a medical emergency put me back on a plane headed overseas once again.

Brigitte, one of the young ladies in our Youth at Risk program in CAR, was having consistent seizures and needed to see a specialist in Nairobi. This meant I needed to find a female chaperone fluent in English to accompany Brigitte to the hospital in Kenya, an English-speaking country. Unfortunately, it was impossible to procure one in the Central African Republic, which is a French-speaking country. Thus, my trip back to Africa.

Thanks for your prayers, support

To all who prayed so fervently for Brigitte, God answered in a way that I can't even begin to articulate. And for those who gave sacrificially, know that God saw your generosity and will bless you according to His riches in glory.

I'll spare you from repetitive information since most of you saw my updates on Julie's Heart Cry's social media platforms.

While in CAR, I had the joy of serving, loving, and worshipping with 15 pastors' wives in the Bimon Resource Center sewing program. Lord willing, I'm hoping to return in August for our first graduating class!

This center offers a much-needed solution for women willing to learn a skill and work hard to provide for themselves and their families. However, the resource center's ultimate goal goes beyond teaching skills to women and child mothers.

It is a place where these ladies will hear the Gospel being applied to areas where cultural beliefs and practices tend to supersede biblical principles. Yes! Even among pastors' wives! They will learn how poverty directly correlates with abortion among leaders in the church, including lay members. And they will hear the heart of God concerning taking the life of an innocent person.

A 16-year-old girl who was six months pregnant walked to her local clinic and obtained abortion pills to end the pregnancy ... no questions asked. A pregnant woman at full term can walk into these clinics and receive the same service ... no questions asked.

I need your help

And this is happening under the radar of the church, where the topic of abortion is pretty much nonexistent. How can I know this and keep silent?

I can't! So, I'm going to shamelessly plead with you, my dear readers, to consider donations toward my trip in August. I feel compelled to revive Julie's Heart Cry's annual women's conference, called A Mother's Cry, where females of all ages and from all walks of life will hear nothing but the heart of God concerning purity and the sanctity of life.

The objective of all Julie's Heart Cry ministry projects is to share, teach and point the hearts of women, young and old, to the uncompromising Word of God. I know beyond a shadow of a doubt that my calling and responsibility is to discuss these difficult topics with the ladies in our program.

Would you please help make my trip possible this fall for this much-needed women's conference?
